The 2011 Barolo Rocche dell'Annunziata opens to great intensity and impressive wholeness. This is a generous wine, and it delivers that abundance with frank and genuine directness. That fundamental honesty is this wine's greatest quality. It speaks to Nebbiolo, the warm vintage and this very special vineyard cru. Dark fruit and spice are woven deeply into the wine's rich texture. Only 1,800 bottles (750-milliliters and magnums) were produced.

The ripeness (and the 15% alcohol) feels a bit overdone in the 2011 Barolo Gattera. The bouquet offers powerhouse aromas of dried raspberry and strawberry confit with spice, leather and campfire ash at the back. The wine is richly textured with soft fruity flavors and a stern line of tannic firmness at the back. Only 4,000 bottles were produced.

Initially subdued, the 2011 Barolo Castelletto takes a few minutes to find its footing. Once it does, it delivers a generous and steady array of wild berry, cassis, sweet almond, grilled herb and licorice. The effect is bold and happy, like a warm embrace from a close friend. This Barolo ages in oak for two years and is structured and firm with spicy endnotes on the finish. Some 5,000 bottles were produced.

The 2011 Barolo Arborina delivers a tight and austere personality. The wine was slightly shut down upon release but has since gained in volume and depth. It shows sharp lines and great definition with plenty of dark fruit, cassis and dried cherry. The tannins are ripe and dry. Only 6,000 bottles were produced.

This basic Barolo from Mauro Veglio offers very good quality at an attractive price point. The warm-vintage 2011 Barolo opens to dark fruit, candied cherry and dried blackberry. Spice, tobacco and grilled herb are all folded in at the back. The alcohol is recorded at 15% and it does leave its mark. It also adds to the power and intensity of the mouthfeel. Some 18,000 bottles were produced.
